GEROME PAINTING

IS SOLD FOR $7,200

James 4-6-12
"The Death of Caesar" Brings Top Price at Sale of Art of Haggin and Other Estates.

$75,185 FOR 151 PICTURES

Schreyer's "Arabian Horsemen"
 Fetches $6,600, a Ziem Venice
 Scene $5,600, a Daubigny $2,100.

Seventy-six pictures from the estate of the late James B. Haggin and others were sold under the auspices of the American Art Galleries at the Plaza last evening and brought returns of $58,510, making a grand total for the 151 paintings of the collection of $75,185. An impressive Gérôme, "The Death of Ceasar," the scene laid in the Roman Senate Chamber, sold by order of Wilder, Ewen & Patterson, attorneys, brought the highest price, going to R. H. Lorenz, agent, for $7,200.

Schreyer's "Arabian Horsemen," belonging to the Haggin estate, brought $6,600, going to H. S. Harkness. A Ziem Venice scene, "Une Fête à Venise," also from the Haggin estate, formerly in the collection of the late Charles A. Dana and sold by the American Art Association, with a few other choice pictures in the famous Dana sale in 1898, brought $5,600, also going to Mr. Harkness. A beautiful Daubigny, "On the French Coast," which was one of the fine pictures of the sale, belonging to the Haggin estate, formerly in the Truax collection, brought a comparatively low price because of its large size, 39½ by 75 inches. It went to Louis Ralston for $2,100.

BEAUTIFUL ART MR. HAGGIN LEFT SURPRISES FRIENDS

Few Knew Richness of His Collection
Until His Death Threw It on the Market.

The opening of a new exhibition of paintings in the American Art Galleries, No. 6 East Twenty-third street, yesterday revealed for the first time to many frequenters of the galleries that the late James B. Haggin, horse breeder, turfman, mining man and financier, also was a collector of pictures, and one of no mean discrimination. Mr. Haggin's collection of seventy-five works by important European artists is the feature of the exhibition, and will furnish the chief attraction of the sale, which will take place in the ballroom of the Plaza Hotel on next Wednesday and Thursday nights.

When Mr. Haggin died at Villa Rosa, Newport, on September 12, 1914, at the age of eighty-seven years, after a successful and interesting career, first as the owner of thoroughbred horses and later as a power in financial circles, he had silently and unostentatiously acquired a well balanced and representative collection of the painting of the middle and late nineteenth century. It includes such names as Schreyer, Ziem, Daubigny, Michel, Gerome, Von Lenbach, Diaz and Jacque, with Mignard and men of the early English school representing an older period. Attracting the attention as one enters the large second floor gallery are Ziem's "Une Fete a Venise," a great canvas in the rich soft reds, golds and blues that the artist loved so well and used so frequently, and "The Edge of the Common," a fine example of the rather rare landscape art of Thomas Gainsborough. The former comes from the Charles A. Dana collection and the latter from that of William H. Fuller, both of which were dispersed at one sale in 1898. In the same room are the Mignards, graceful companion portraits of a lady and a gentleman of the Louis XIV. period, and the "Portrait of a Noble Lady," attributed to the same artist. A marching cavalcade of Adolf Schreyer's Arabian horsemen hangs from the same walls.

France is, of course, well represented in this collection. The art lover will remember the sylvan idyl by Diaz of the five wood nymphs surrounded by a flock of Cupids, "On the French Coast," by Daubigny, a landscape of great breadth and strength of feeling, with a blue-gray, gray-green sea stretching away from a strip of shrub grown shore. Then there is Gerome's "Journey Through Algeria," with its string of camels entering an oasis, and Michel's "Woodland Landscape," from the David C. Lyall collection.

The exhibition comprises 131 paintings. Besides the Haggin collection there are pictures consigned by the estate of the late Matthew Addy, of Cincinnati, Ohio; by Oren Westcott, of Providence, R. I., and others. Some of the gems of the exhibition are to be found among these other seventy-six pictures. They include another Ziem, called "Venice," from the Addy estate; several fine Geromes, among which is his dramatic "Death of Caesar;" Isabey's grandiose storm scene, "On the Coast;" two examples of Delacroix and many other noteworthy canvases.

73—THE ADORATION OF THE GODDESS MINERVA POLLIADÉ BY THE MAIDENS OF ATHENS

Height, 35 inches; length, 54 inches

THE scene depicted is on the Acropolis of Athens at a time when this celebrated hill was bare of those great monuments which were erected later and many of which still exist. Herodotus relates that, when the City of Athens was founded, the people were in doubt what name to choose for it. Neptune and Minerva were both disputing the honor, and the gods decided that the preference should be given to the one who could bestow upon mankind the most valuable gift. Neptune, with a stroke of his trident, presented the war horse, while Minerva created an olive branch, the symbol of peace, and she was awarded the victory.

129—THE EDGE OF THE COMMON

Height, 25 inches; length, 30 inches

A PATH through a common of great diversity of surface winds across the middle distance, back of a central hillock which slopes roughly to the foreground and in front of a dense forest. Another dense growth of trees edges into the picture on the right near the foreground, and between these two woods the light from a clouded but still luminous sky falls upon the hillock, is reflected into the nearer shadows, and brings into effective relief the figures of idle men and an anciently felled tree trunk on the slope, and a farmer and pack-horses following the winding path. A landscape rich and warm in color, charming in the light distribution and in the fine complexity of composition.
